Evidence

One of the most important elements of a persuasive speech is evidence. Evidence can be used to support your claims and make them more believable. Cass uses a variety of evidence in his speech, including statistics, examples, and expert testimony. For example, he cites a study that shows that students who participate in after-school programs are less likely to drop out of school. He also provides examples of how after-school programs have helped students succeed in school and life.

Logic

In addition to evidence, Cass also uses logic to make his argument persuasive. Logic is the use of reason to support your claims. Cass uses logical arguments to show why his claims are true. For example, he argues that after-school programs are a good investment because they help students succeed in school and life. He also argues that after-school programs are a cost-effective way to reduce crime and violence.

Emotion

In addition to evidence and logic, Cass also uses emotion to make his argument persuasive. Emotion can be used to connect with the audience on a personal level and make them more likely to agree with you. Cass uses a variety of emotional appeals in his speech, including humor, pathos, and ethos. For example, he uses humor to make his speech more engaging and to connect with the audience on a personal level. He also uses pathos to appeal to the audience's emotions and make them more likely to agree with him. Finally, he uses ethos to establish his credibility and make the audience more likely to trust him.

Structure

In addition to the content of his speech, Cass also uses a clear and concise structure to help the audience follow his train of thought. His speech is divided into three main parts: the , the body, and the . In the , Cass introduces his topic and states his main argument. In the body, he provides evidence, logic, and emotion to support his argument. In the , he summarizes his main points and calls the audience to action.
