Sanjay Ghosh's 'Quickening Fields' is a powerful and moving collection of poems that explores the themes of memory, migration, and belonging. Through vivid imagery and lyrical language, Ghosh's poems give voice to the experiences of those who have been displaced from their homes and forced to rebuild their lives in new and unfamiliar places.

The poems in 'Quickening Fields' are often rooted in Ghosh's own experiences as an immigrant from India. In the poem "Arrival," Ghosh describes the disorienting experience of arriving in a new country and trying to make sense of a strange new world:

In the airport's fluorescent glare,/ I am an alien, a stranger/ in this strange land.

The language is a foreign tongue,/ the people's faces unfamiliar./ I am lost, alone, and afraid.

But even in the midst of displacement and loss, Ghosh's poems find moments of hope and beauty. In the poem "Belonging," Ghosh writes about finding a sense of belonging in the unlikeliest of places:

I am a stranger in this land,/ but I have found a home here,/ in the hearts of strangers/ who have become my family.

We are bound together by shared experiences,/ of loss and longing,/ of hope and dreams.

'Quickening Fields' is a timely and important collection of poems that speaks to the experiences of millions of people around the world who have been forced to leave their homes. Ghosh's poems give voice to the pain of displacement, but they also offer hope and the possibility of finding belonging in a new and unfamiliar world.
